MAP WITHOUT YEAST

If you study history, geography, a foreign language, or take a course in arts and crafts in your school, you will find you have to make maps. And you can also decorate your den at home with maps hung on the wall. Here is a simple map which turns out to be most attractive.

What country do you want to use? Suppose you were studying the Spanish language, then you might have to make a map either of South America or Spain. Or if you were studying the German language you might have to make a map of Germany. Or if you were studying French, you might have to make a map of France.

First you need a sheet of oaktag which can be purchased in your local stationary or art store. The width and length depends upon how big you wish to make your map. Let us say you want to make a map of South America. This is the map my son made at home. If you have a map of South America you can place it over a sheet of carbon paper and trace the outline of South America on the oaktag. Or you can do it by freehand.

But I'll tell you a big secret. This is a simple device which helps you copy and enlarge any picture. It is called a Pantograph. As you go over your original copy, a pencil enlarges the map. You can also use a device which throws the image of any picture on a sheet of paper. So take your choice. You can get that outline of a map on oaktag by any of these means.

Make a mixture of about eight parts of flour to one part of salt. Then add to this mixture just enough water to make a thick pasty-like product. Slowly pour this product upon your oaktag and keep it within the outline. You can use a tongue depressor, a wooden small mustard spoon, or a thin wooden ruler to spread the mixture. Then smooth it out.

How can you show mountains and rivers? As the mixture hardens you can use your fingers to push together with the aid of a small wooden stick enough of the mixture to show a mountain or a mountain range. To show the course of a river make your indentations with an orange stick.

Let the map remain on a table or a chair for a day to harden. Then you can do the final smoothing out as the mixture gets harder. It is best to paint only when the crust is completely hard. You have your choice of different ways to paint and show the various countries on the map.

One way is to use oil or water paints. If dad has some colored enamels you can use them. My son used a special kind of paint. It came in a set and is called "CH Relievo Color." The paint resembles oil paint but the novel part is that there are packages of different colors made from bits of material. When dropped on the "different countries" you get an effect of raised painting.

If the oaktag becomes a bit messy during the work, don't worry. For when you are finished, all you have to do is to cut out along the outline and then paste onto another sheet of oaktag.

If mother happens to have an old large aluminum baking pan she no longer needs, that will be an excellent frame for a small or medium sized map. You cut along the outline and then fasten the map to the bottom of the pan. You can even hang it up if it has a handle. If you use blue oaktag it will give the impression of the color of the sea so that your country becomes surrounded by water. Well, the next time you have to make a map try this simple but novel way and your teacher should like it.

THE MAGIC HANDKERCHIEF

You are at a party. Some of the boys and girls want to play games. You do this for an hour. Then some of the boys and girls sing songs. You are wearing a suit and in the pocket of your coat there is a handkerchief. You turn to two of the boys.

"I have a handkerchief that comes from the far away place we know as Tibet. It was given to me many years ago by a friend for whom I did a big favor. He said that he saved the life of an old merchant and as a favor he received this magic handkerchief. It has a remarkable property. It can turn something broken into a whole unit again."

"You're kidding," one of your friends will probably remark. "There just isn't any such a handkerchief in the entire world."

"Then I will show you," you remark calmly.

You take the white handkerchief out of your coat pocket. You open it and wave it up and down three times.

"Magic Handkerchief listen well. I repeat the mystic charm. Dogoshtiboomsholarme. So what is broken you make well."

You place the handkerchief on a table. Every one sees it is open. Then you take a toothpick from your pocket and hand it to a girl.

"Place this toothpick in the center of the white handkerchief," you tell her.

She does this. Then you calmly remove your coat. Roll up the sleeves of your shirt. Spread the fingers on each hand wide apart.

"Watch carefully what I am doing," you tell your friends. "Nothing inbetween my fingers or up my sleeves."

Then you fold the handkerchief and hand it to the girl with the following instructions.

"The toothpick is now covered by the handkerchief. See its outline? You break it in half. I have covered it as a safety measure. Otherwise half of it might stick into your finger."

The girl follows orders and then returns the handkerchief to you. You now raise your eyes to the ceiling and look very serious.

"Magic Handkerchief listen well. I repeat the mystic charm. Dogoshtiboomsholarme. So what is broken you make well."

Then you open the handkerchief and wave it. Onto the floor will fall the toothpick. But not broken in half! It is the entire toothpick. Boy, oh, boy, are they puzzled.

"Hey, do that again," somebody might say. You are prepared. However you do say: "Just once more only. This is a very fatiguing thing for me to do."

So you repeat exactly as before and with the same results. Now everybody thinks you are wonderful. Nothing like being a first class Magician. How was it done? Very simple. You need a large handkerchief with a machine sewed seam. The sides of the seam should be opened. On one side of the seam you force a toothpick. Into the other side you force another toothpick. This is done at home. So actually you have a prepared handkerchief ready to use at any party. When you fold the handkerchief you cover the toothpick in the seam as well as the toothpick in the center. But when you hand it to the boy or girl, you give them the part of the handkerchief covering the seam. So the toothpick in the seam is the one that is broken. Don't repeat it more than once. Don't let anyone examine the handkerchief. If they insist you merely smile and say:

"Should your hands touch this handkerchief, the spell of magic would be broken. Sorry, but in a hundred years from today come around and I'll show it to you again."

GROUP HORSE

At many of the riding stables of academies you will find that the Riding Master takes out a group of people in one ride. Unless he definitely knows something about your riding, he prefers that you remain with the group. This is a good safety measure. Generally the horses are well trained for group riding. They obey the Riding Master's orders over yours. The horses follow each other and stop together.

This may annoy you. You may desire to try to ride a group horse alone, but it is not an easy task. For the horse wants to remain with the group. Recently I watched a young boy, who was given permission, try to get his horse away from the group. PEPPER was a smart horse. He refused to listen to his young master. Because of the way he had been trained, it would not be safe for him to leave the other horses.

Even the horses that you ride alone, are generally trained to know every inch of the trail. Give them the rein, and you will find the horses turn around and head back for the stable. This is a good safety measure. If the horse should ditch you, it will return to the stable and you walk back on foot and tell your tale of woe. Sometimes a new trail is created. Even years later, I found that some of the horses could remember the old trail, though it could hardly be seen by the human eye.

Horses have likes and dislikes just like human beings. Some horses like to be next to other horses. PEPPER likes to be near BUCKY but not next to THUNDER. Why? Alas, I never had the chance to interview either of them. When the Riding Master tells you to keep your horse next to another horse, listen and follow instructions. Learning to ride is a lot of fun. When are you going to begin?
